INDIAN BRAVES CAMP AT MOKENA

Sioux Indians Pitch Tepees Near Wolf Rd., Once Trail of Redskins

The people of Mokena were much surprised Wednesday morning when they found a large Indian encampment that had moved into the community during Tuesday night.

The tepees, surrounded by Indians, squaws and papooses, reminded some of the older inhabitants of the days when Wolf Road was the trail of the Indians to the north and Mokena the Indian name for "Big Hole" or "Water Hole" was the stopping place of the various tribes that came around Lake Michigan from the east and south with Hickory Creek and vicinity as their meeting place and council ground.

The 32 Indians here Wednesday were in charge of Mr. Clarence L. Cordry, known as "White Chief Chikeli", Indian agent at the Rosebud Agency in South Dakota.

Mr. Cordry's home town is Mission, South Dakota and he has a large ranch 7 miles out from the city.

The Indians were full blood Sioux. The cavalcade were just returning from an engagement with the Federal Northwest Territory Pageantry touring Indiana and on appearance with the Indiana State Fair at Indianapolis.

Agent Cordry and the most of the Indians were acquainted with Col and Mrs. Don C. Hall, and they made a forced drive here to meet them for a few hours visit.

A suitable camp ground was soon supplied and the "old warriors" crept into their tents for a "sleep" among Mokena home folks.

Many of the Indians were Chiefs of different Sioux Tribes, and there were those among them who could have told thrilling tales of Indian attacks and wars in Dakota territory of which they were active participants from the Days of the Custer massacre in 1876 to the exciting days of the Ghost Dancers.

Among the Indians here were Chief "Afraid of Eagle", Indian Government Scout, 85 years old; Chief "Shout At", 70 years old; Chief William "Bear Shield" and Chief "Iron Shell". Many of them had toured the world with Col. W. T. Cody "Buffalo Bill" and his Wild West Show.

Mr. Cordry advised Editor Semmler that he would stop again enroute and in honor of Col. Hall and in return for Mokena's generous hospitality would try to arrange for the presentation of a few of the Rites and Ceremonies and Indian tribal dances.

Mokena Civic Club Selects Emblem Design

The Mokena Civic Association recently announced that they would pay cash prizes for the best design submitted for consideration of the Association at their meeting Monday evening.

After carefully examining the designs submitted, it was decided that the design made by Miss Alice Lauffer was the most typical of the plans of the Association and was accordingly awarded the first prize and designated as the official emblem of the Association.

It is quite elaborate in design and will be used on the printed literature and stationery of the Association.

On the other hand, it was decided that a more simple design should be used on any large signs that the Association might want to make and it was therefore decided that the emblem designed and submitted by Frank Clevenger be given second prize.

A very large attendance was at the meeting of the Association and real live interest was manifested by all members present.

Another undertaking which the Mokena Civic Association feels would be an asset to the social side of the life of the community is the creation of a bowling team and the erection of a bowling alley in Mokena as there are quite a number of bowling enthusiasts in Mokena.

Stokes Nebeker has been appointed chairman of a committee to investigate the possibilities of a local bowling team and bowling alley.

MAYOR AUCTIONS OLD FRANKFORT VILLAGE HALL

Mayor Geo. Sangemeister of Frankfort proved to be a real result producing auctioneer when he cried the sale disposing of the old historic Frankfort Village hall and several sheds and a barn on the adjoining former Feil lot which was recently purchased by the village as a part of the site for the new village hall and community center.

The auction sale was quite well attended and bidding was quite spirited. Mayor Sangemeister had asked several members of the village board to act as a board of appraisers before the sale began and to determine an approximate price which the buildings should bring. The appraisers decided that if the buildings fetched $283.00 it would be a good sale. When the sale was over it was found that Mayor Sangemeister had sold the buildings for $282.50, just 50 cents below the estimated sale price which was considered an excellent bargain.

The old village hall with a belfry which has been in use as a combined council chamber, fire department and jail, was sold to Eugene Ruetiger of Homer for $136.00. A large size heating stove was sold separately to Mr. Ruetiger for $22.50. The old jail cells were included in the purchase price of the hall.

After the sale, Mr. Ruetiger sold the old cells to Herman Barlewort for $6. Mr. Barlewort intends to use the iron of the cells in a cow barn.

A shed and a barn on the Feil lot were sold to Attorney Herbert Folkers of Joliet for $121.50.

The Frankfort horse watering trough was sold for $2.50 to an unidentified purchaser.

Lack of Funds Blocks Community Nurse Project

A good representation from three townships, Frankfort, New Lenox and Green Garden, were present Wednesday evening in the Mokena Public school for the purpose of discussing the question of securing a community nurse. Also present were, Dr. Levy, from the State Board of Health, the Unit nurse, Mrs. Robinson of Chicago and Mrs. Katherine M. Leenhouts of LaSalle, Ill., District Supervising Nurse.

Rev. W. Geffert acted as chairman. It was brought out that no nurse could be had this year as the budgets for schools and townships were made in the spring of the year and they cannot by law be changed until the next year. Public School officials also showed that the schools would not be able to finance a nurse at all, as since 1929 property values has lowered 50 percent and operating expenses have gone up, so much, that in several cases, as in Mokena and New Lenox, where there are many more pupils than before and an additional teacher is needed but are not able to pay for one out of the taxes that the districts are allowed to levy.

It was quite well recognized that a community nurse would be a good asset, and as a beginning toward a solution, suggestion was made that

SHORT IN WIRE CAUSES FIRE ON TINLEY FARM

A short in the electric wiring in the large barn on the Adam Schilling farm near Tinley Park was the cause of a big fire last Saturday night which destroyed a large barn and a silo. About 50 tons of hay were destroyed by the fire.

A large basement under the barn housed the live stock which, however was rescued before the flames reached the lower part of the building. The fire broke out about 8 o'clock and the Tinley Park fire department was summoned.

The new truck with its large booster tank did excellent service but when the fire threatened the residence and other buildings on the farm, a call was sent to the Orland Park fire department for their aid.

Chief John Helenhouse and his well known fire fighters quickly responded but as the truck was turning the corner from Kean Ave. to 151st St., it skidded into a ditch scattering the men in all directions but luckily no one was injured. Chief Helenhouse called the roll immediately to see if all the men were able to respond. They responded and were ready to go, after they managed to get the truck out of the ditch by sheer man power and as soon as they got it on the road no time was lost in getting to the scene of the fire. They turned their attention to saving the remaining buildings because the barn and silo were practically burned to the ground upon their arrival. Both fire departments are to be given much credit for good work.

five townships, including Homer and Manhattan to the above mentioned three, combine to secure a nurse, thus spreading the cost of same of about $200 each township per year. Dr. Levy thought this was too much territory for one nurse but thought it might be a good experiment. The State would probably pay a certain percent of her wages.

A community nurse thus engaged would be available to the community at large but not for bedside nursing. Educating the public to be Health Minded was recognized at this meeting to be a necessary fact. Parents should come to realize that when their children are ill, with a cold or whatever, they should keep them home and save exposing other children.

The New Lenox group reported work they have been doing in their village school for the past three years that of giving Shick tests and scarlet fever immunizing serum for 25c per person, as a PTA project.

As a means to clear up the maze of ideas existing at this meeting, a motion was made and adopted that "The Mokena PTA continue their work and notify other PTA groups who are interested and to inform them of the interest of this group in the work of securing a community nurse."

SYNOPSIS

Richard Exon, a poor young Englishman, befriends elderly Matthew Gering, who at his death, gives him a statement claiming he, Gering, is Rudolf Elbert Virgil, Count of Brief, of ancient Austrian nobility who was betrayed 20 years before by his twin brother, Ferdinand, whose sentence for forgery he himself served. Ferdinand appropriated his title, property and daughter. Before he dies, Gering tells Exon there is a family secret, known only to the head of the house, to be found in the great tower at Brief, by a doorway none can ever find. Exon inherits his uncle's fortune and sets out to right Gering's wrongs. En route he encounters Percy Elbert Virgil, son of the villainous Ferdinand and sees him in conference with Inskip, a diamond merchant. He engages a valet, Winter, who hates Percy and meets by chance at a garage, John Herrick, who is a linguist and who as a youth served as a page at Gering's wedding, and had visited Brief. Herrick agrees to aid Exon. They establish headquarters at Brenda Revok's farm at Raven, a few miles from Brief and make their plans. They find the castle almost inaccessible. They see a closed car occupied by Percy Virgil, a chauffeur and a woman. Hearing a dog scream, they see the chauffeur flogging it, just as a horse with a girl astride bounds along the path and is felled by a strung wire. The girl, unconscious, is picked up carelessly by the chauffeur and woman, who then run away, after dropping her. Exon rescues the girl and carries her to his waiting car. He identifies the girl as Elizabeth, daughter of the disowned Gering, tells her of her cousin's plot to abduct her and takes her to Raven, where he tells her the story of her father and promises to go the limit to help her right her father's wrongs. Elizabeth wins faith in her benefactor. Percy Virgil brings the police to Raven, announcing that two strangers are being sought for the kidnapping of Elizabeth. Herrick discomfits Virgil, tells of the morning's adventure, names a man called Max and hands the police a sealed envelope with the name of the leader in the abduction—Percy Virgil. Exon and Herrick suspect Percy of having sold the family jewels through Inskip. All realize the only solution is to find the Secret of Brief, which the impostor Ferdinand does not know. They decide to take possession of the Tower. Late one night, after hard labor, they force their way into the Tower, with Elizabeth aiding Exon and Herrick. There they begin their search for the secret doorway, working in silence against time. The search for the secret doorway is almost hopeless until they find a sliding panel in a step.

As might have been expected, the bolt was tight in its well, but it was not cemented in, and after another ten minutes I managed to wheedle it out.

I then took the mallet from Herrick and tapped the rise. At once the side I had tapped retreated before the blow, but the other side started forward out of its place.

"Pivoted," breathed Herrick. "It's hung on a spindle, just like a revolving door."

One hand on my shoulder, Elizabeth lowered her torch.

There was now before us a gap, where the rise had been. This gap was split into two by the rise itself, for this had simply been turned and was now presenting its edge, instead of its face. The torch immediately showed that the gap on the right was void—that is to say, on the side on which the rise had retired; but the gap on the left was framing a block of stone. And sunk in the face of this stone was a handle, or rude, iron dog . . .

"Go on," said Herrick. "Pull it. If a genie appears, so much the better. I've quite a lot of orders to give."

I laid hold of the dog and pulled . . .

At once the block slid forward, after the way of a drawer that you pull from a chest. And, as you may pull a drawer clear, so I drew the block out of its housing, over the tread of the step which lay, like an apron to take it, in front of the gap.

The block was immensely heavy, for it must have been 12 inches deep, and, when I had drawn it clear, it was all I could do to lift it out of the way and on to the tread above.

To do this, I had to stand up and lift it between my legs; but the others stayed where they were.

As I laid it down—

"Do you see it, too?" said Herrick.

"I—I don't understand," breathed Elizabeth. "I mean, how can that be there?"

"What is it?" said I, and stepped back to go down on my knees.

"It's time we went home," said Herrick. "That's what it is. When I run into black magic, that's where I get off."

Never had idle words so specious a warranty.

The block which I had withdrawn had left behind it no room.

Though I make a fool of myself, at least I will make this clear.

When you pull a drawer from a chest and lay it aside, you leave in the chest a space which is very slightly larger than the drawer which you have removed. But, though I had drawn out the block, there was no such space left. In fact, the gap was now framing another block of stone which resembled exactly the one I had taken away, except that it had no handle by which it could be withdrawn. And when I presently touched it, the same indefinable tremor told me it was not fixed.

"Can you beat it?" said Herrick, shortly.

"On the face of it, no," said I. "But there must be some simple reason for such a thing. I mean, these doings are ancient: there's no machinery here."

"There can't be a reason," said Herrick, "unless you're a conjurer. If you pick a brick out of a wall, you've a right to expect a recess. Well, there's the brick you picked out: but where's the recess?"

"There was a recess," said my lady. "There must have been. But now it's been filled."

"That's right," said I. "That's right. And I'll tell you another thing. It's got to be emptied again before we can put that block back in its place."

"Do you mean to suggest," said Herrick, "that a slab of stone of that size, fixed or unfixed, can shift to and fro on its own?"

"I have it," said Brenda's voice. "The thing is a counterpoise. My uncle has one at his farm. It is very old, but its movement is silent and sure as the flight of an owl."

There was an electric silence.

Then—

"The girl's right," said Herrick. "And there's the conjuring trick. Beneath these steps there's a balance; and when you drew out that block you lightened one of its scales—with two results. One was that the scale you had lightened rose in the air, and thus revealed to our eyes the second weight on that scale. That is it, there—in the gap." He got to his feet. "And the other result was this—that the opposite scale sank down—thus revealing somewhere or other the doorway we're trying to find."

That this interpretation was good, there could be no doubt, and we all began to go down the winding stair, surveying the walls, as we went, for some gap in their masonry. We were too much excited, I fear, to use our wits. Had we done so, we should have perceived that there was but one direction in which the balance could hang and that this would bring the scale which we wished to locate very nearly above the doorway by which we had entered the tower. However, as luck would have it, we now had no need of wits, but only of eyes; and as we emerged from the staircase into the small, square hall, we saw directly before us the interspace which we sought.

On the wall which faced us one of the panels had sunk—not very much, but five inches . . . exactly the height of the block which I had pulled out of the stair. The gap thus shown was breast-high and 15 inches in width. Beyond was an open space, and when I put in my hand, I could feel a faint current of air.

The panel hung on a chain, which was, of course, attached to the balance above. And so long as it hung on that chain, the panel could go no further, because the counterweight had no room to rise. So I took the weight of the panel, while Herrick deftly unfastened the heavy chain.

"Then I let the panel sink slowly into some slot in the stone . . ."

At last it came to rest, some six inches still protruding and making a sill to the doorway which we had discovered at last.

This gave to a winding stair, precisely resembling that upon which we had passed so many wearisome hours. In a word, with the hall for landing, the stair of the tower went on down, curling slowly right-handed, into the bowels of the earth.

For the others I cannot answer, but until the way was open and we were about to go down, I had never considered to what "the doorway" might lead: but now that we were about to discover the truth, I remembered the late Count's words and, with those for straw, began to make fabulous bricks.

"It may be that you can use it . . ."

I will not set down the pictures my fancy drew. Enough that they were all false. But I have this consolation—that not one man in a million would have predicted the scene which presently met our eyes.

Herrick declined to go down, but stayed in the hall with Brenda, "unless and until," said he, "my lady decides that she wants me on in this act." So I preceded Elizabeth, torch in hand.

For 30 steps we went down. And then we came to a chamber that had no door.

On the threshold I stopped and lighted a second torch, and my lady looked over my shoulder, to see what I saw.

The chamber was small—some fifteen feet high by eight, and some nine feet high. Its walls and floor and ceiling were all of stone, and though there was no window, the air was by no means foul. (This, I afterwards found, was due to two vents—one low down in a wall, and the other high up at the opposite end of the room: but though I sought for their mouths, I never was able to find them, because they were too well hid.) Towards one end of the cell was a great oak stall, plainly very ancient and finely carved, and against one wall was a coffer, also of oak. There was no other furniture.

In the stall was seated a man—or what was left of one. His pose was natural. His head was up and was leaning against the back of the stall, his arms lay along its arms, and his trunk and his feet were well and truly planted on oak and stone. His clothes were those of the Fifteenth century. His tunic was of diapered velvet which the passage of many years had brought to shreds and tatters, if not to dust, but a jeweled belt was still girding the crumbling loins and a chain was sunk in the ruin about the neck. Hose still hung upon the legs, which were skin and bone, and a patch, that had been a cap, was still crowning the thick fair hair. This was inviolate. The face and hands were withered, but otherwise well preserved and dead. The eyes, which were wide, had a curious, sightless look and might have belonged to a man who was living, but blind; and the whole was in no way offensive, because, I suppose, there was no sign of corruption, but only of age. Indeed, had the hair been white, the figure would have been full of dignity: but the color of the hair was fatal, suggesting an old man's efforts to seem to be young—one of Time's shabbier jests, for the man had not seen old age.

On the coffer were lying three things. One was a skin of parchment—or part of a skin. Upon this had been written Latin, still to be read. By its side lay the translation, clearly inscribed upon vellum and made at some later date. And between the two lay a massive signet-ring.

As might have been expected, the documents told us the truth. "Here sits Elbert, Duke of Austria and Carinthia, King of Hungary, slain by his host and liegeman, Rudolf of Brief, because he came upon him defiling his wife."

"With the fear of death upon her, Helen of Brief declared the following facts: 'That the King and she were secretly married, before he wedded the Queen and before she deceitfully wedded Rudolf of Brief. In proof whereof she offered her marriage lines signed by the Cardinal Gaddi, lately dead of the plague, whom God reward,'"

"That the first and third of her children, whom Rudolf believed to be his, were both the sons of the King."

"Rudolf made haste to apprise the Queen of the truth."

"For the sake of that injured lady, he undertook, on conditions, to hold his peace. Between them it was agreed:

"That he should hold to his witness the corpse of the King, himself providing another to take its place and be interred and entombed as though it were that of the King."

"That since Otto, whom he thought his first-born, was now IN TRUTH Duke of Austria and Carinthia, King of Hungary, he and his heirs should FOR EVER hold the right to call upon the heirs of her body in any stress, whose help they shall have WITHOUT FAIL by showing the King's great ring."

"That her heirs shall be so instructed in perpetuity."

Street Car Blamed for Discharging Cartridge and Wounding Pedestrian

How a man could be shot on a downtown street in broad daylight with several persons walking within a few feet of him, and yet none of them seeing anybody shoot at him—this was the mystery that the police were called upon to solve when Christian Knoll received a bullet wound in the hip while walking through the business section of a leading metropolis, reports William C. Dudgeon in the Detroit News.

The first important fact that the officers discovered was that, while several had heard the report, none had seen any flash, indicating that the bullet must have come quite a distance. As Knoll had been shot in the side next to the pavement it seemed certain that the shot had been fired from across the street.

This latter probability was not borne out, however, by the testimony of persons who had been walking on the other side of the street. In fact, they were all very positive in their assertions that the sound of the shot had come from the side of the street where the injured man had been at the time he was shot.

In their endeavor to reconcile these seemingly conflicting statements, the police were just about convinced that the shot had been fired from a passing automobile when word came from the hospital that the bullet, when it struck Knoll's hip, had been traveling an

"By Rudolf's order, Gollanx, a chemist of Innsbruck, preserved the corpse of the King. This he did according to a certain prescription which he had of a learned Venetian whose son he had saved. His raiment also he dipped against the corruption of Time."

"Dated the ninth day of March in the year of Our Lord one thousand four hundred and thirty-nine (the King being dead on the seventh, having lain in state till now and to be replaced this night) and written down word for word as my lord Rudolf hath commanded by his unworthy servant and clerk

"GABRIEL OF LITTAI."

"Whom I slue whiles his ink was wet for he hath a long tongue and I have need of a bobby as he hath said."

"RUDOLF OF BRIEF."

The original postscript was laboriously written in German and poorly spelt. The translation was done in German from first to last, and to this had been added two lists—one of the Lords of Brief and one of the several Heads of the other House.

Elizabeth was trembling. "Oh, Richard, d'you know what this means?"

"It means you're a queen," said I. "But then I knew that before."

"No, no," she dabbled at the parchment. "That last name there. Not my grandfather's—the other. Harriet Vincenza Saying, Duchess of Whelp. She's still alive—and she's bigger than any queen. She's always known as 'Old Harry.' Her mother was English—as mine was, and if she'll take up my cause . . ."

"She must," said I. "It's a case of deep calling to deep."

"She's a law to herself," said Elizabeth, thoughtfully. "But if she does—well, next time you come to Brief you won't have to force any bars."

"That's right," said I, feebly enough. With a sudden movement, I set a torch in her hand. "And now I'll go for a pen. You must write your name here at once. Shall Herrick come down?"

"If you please."

I left her there and mounted the unworn stair.

The thing was absurd and childish, but now that I saw what was coming, my heart sank down. The "rough stuff" was over, and so my service was done. From now on, steps would be taken by a lady of high degree. Pressure would be put on the impostor: ways and means would be used which were out of my ken. And when the game had been won, I should be invited to Brief . . . where a servant would hold the door wide and another would take my hat. I should be ushered—I . . . that had broken into the place, to set a queen on her throne. . . . And then I should be presented to Her Grace the Duchess of Whelp, and the Countess of Brief would tell her how good I had been—I that had held a King's daughter against my hammering heart . . .

I suppose that my face was betraying my state of mind, for, as I stepped into the hall, I saw Herrick throw up his head and clap his hands to his eyes.

"Oh, I can't bear it," he groaned. "Don't say that after all this—"

DAVID: TRIUMPHANT FAITH

LESSON TEXT—Psalms 23 and 27:1-6.
GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. Psalm 23:1.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Song of the Shepherd.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Song of a Shepherd Boy.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Songs of Faith and Courage.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Steadfast and Triumphant Faith.

What a fitting conclusion to our three-month study of Old Testament characters it is to sound the note of "triumphant faith." The life stories which have passed in review have been true to life, as they have shifted from strength to weakness, from fear to courage, from moral responsibility to moral weakness. But God is the one who changeth not—and we would not close our series properly without the encouraging reminder that the man who truly believes God may know strength out of weakness, courage in place of fear, may like David rise out of degrading sin and defeat into the joy and victory of faith.

Two elemental needs are common to all mankind—provision for the maintenance of life, both physical and spiritual, and protection from the enemies of soul and body. Our first Scripture portion declares the faith of David in God as his providing shepherd and the second as his security from fear.

I. Provision (Ps. 23).

"The Lord is my shepherd." Putting God first in every detail of life means that there will be

1. No want (vv. 1-5). "My cup runneth over," and surely then there can be no lack of any good thing. God is able and willing. We, like David, should trust Him.

2. No weakness (v. 3). "He restoreth my soul." The world is puzzled by the rejuvenating power of the grace of God in the Christian's soul, but it becomes very real to us through the Word, through prayer, through the indwelling Holy Spirit Himself.

3. No wandering (v. 3). "He leadeth me." In an unknown or dangerous country the essential thing is to stay close to one's guide. In the wilderness of this sinful world, we must keep close to our divine Leader. He knows where the still waters and the green pastures are to be found, even in wildest and most barren land.

4. No worry (v. 6). "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life." It was true of David, it is (or should be), preeminently true of the Christian. Someone has said, "If we trust we do not worry; if we worry we do not trust."

5. But—blessed assurance. Not only will the goodness of God follow us all our days, but we shall "dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

II. Protection (Ps. 27:1-6).

"The Lord is my light and my salvation"—could there be any greater certainty that we shall be delivered from every danger and difficulty? To the one who walks in that light there can be

1. No fear (v. 1). "The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?" He is the perfect and final answer to all the fears of life.

2. No failure (vv. 2, 3). "Though an host should encamp against me . . . in this will I be confident," that they shall not stumble and fall. One of the fears that dogs the footsteps of a man is that after all his effort and labor some enemy will come in and destroy. The Christian must often meet wicked and troublesome enemies—but though they be a host, he may be serene in his soul, knowing that if he is right with God the devices of man or devil against him shall only fail.

3. No falling (vv. 4, 5). "He shall set me up upon a rock," and that rock is in "the secret of his tabernacle." The assurance of the believer in Christ is in Him, His work upon the cross and His certain word of promise.

David longed for the house of the Lord; he wanted to return to the temple from which his many wanderings so often separated him. How blessed is our lot as Christians for we have in our own bodies the temple of the Holy Spirit (I Cor. 3:16, 6:19); we have Christ in us as the hope of glory (Col. 1:22). We also long to be in God's house (that is if we really love Him), but if we are born again we have the temple of God wherever we may be.

4. No fainting (v. 6). "Now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me." Just when, humanly speaking, we would faint because of the enemies all around us, or by reason of the heat and pressure of the fight, then God causes our heads to be lifted up and in the moment of apparent defeat there is victory.

5. But—a song. "I will sing praises unto the Lord." The atmosphere of praise is one which the enemy of our soul cannot stand. It is too rare, too pure, too holy for him. Next time he tries to defeat you—why not "Try Praise"? It works!

Smart Fall Styles
That Are Flattering

HERE are two charming fashions with the crisp, slim-waisted, very feminine look that proves they are new and smart! And you'll notice that the sleeves are proudly puffed up, not out—they give height, not width, to the shoulders. These two simple designs, each accompanied by a detailed sew chart, make it very, very easy for you to have two leading fashions of the coming season at very little cost.

Two-Piece With Jacket Blouse. This charming fashion is extremely good this fall. It's tailored or dressy, according to the materials in which you make it up. The skirt is slim and plain. The jacket-blouse as youthful and becoming as it can be. For street, make it of wool crepe, flannel or faille. For afternoon, choose velvet or broadcloth for the skirt; satin, velvet or silver cloth for the jacket blouse.

With Smart, Slenderizing Lines. Notice that the front panel of the skirt is cut in one with the midriff section—that's a smart detail that you see in expensive models, and it's excellent for large women. Fits well. Shoulder darts, and gathers above the waistline, ease it over the bust, without any hint of bulkiness. Make this of satin, silk crepe, velvet or sheer wool, and you'll like it better than any dress you've had for a long time.

1477 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 2 yards of 39 inch material for the jacket-blouse; 2 yards for the skirt.

1585 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 5 1/2 yards of 39 inch material for long-sleeved dress; 4 1/2 yards for short-sleeved.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

NERVOUS?

Do you feel so nervous you want to scream? Are you cross and irritable? Do you scold those dearest to you?

If your nerves are on edge and you feel you need a good general system tonic, try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women.

For over 60 years one woman has told another how to go "smiling thru" with reliable Pinkham's Compound. It helps nature build up more physical resistance and thus helps calm quivering nerves and lessen discomforts from annoying symptoms which often accompany female functional disorders.

Why not give it a chance to help YOU? Over one million women have written in reporting wonderful benefits from Pinkham's Compound.

HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid
and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.

You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

PAT'S HELP

FOUND

Panting and perspiring, two Irishmen on a tandem bicycle at last got to the top of the steep hill. "That was a stiff climb, Pat," said the first. "Sure and it was that," said Pat. "And if I hadn't kept the brake on we would have gone backwards."

Bill—Where did you get the black eye? Jack—I went to a dance and was struck by the beauty of the place. Left Without Reason He—Don't go. You are leaving me entirely without reason. She—I always leave things as I find them.

Two men were talking together in the public library. Said one: "The dime novel has gone. I wonder where it's gone to?" The other, who knew something of literature in its various phases, answered cynically: "It's gone to two dollars and fifty cents."

NEXT!

Barber—All right, sir. I'll give you a nice artistic haircut. Customer—Not for mine. Artists' hair looks like they cut it themselves.

JUST ONE OF US

"Why do you speak of her as the widow Brown?" "Her husband is such a 'dead one'."

LEAGUE ALL-STAR TO BATTLE DOLTON SUNDAY

A group of Southwest Suburban Junior League players will battle the league leaders, Dolton, this coming Sunday. The game is being arranged by Edward Nugent, president of the Tinley Park baseball club. Seven players each from Homer, Mokena, and Tinley Park selected by their coach will make up the squad. The All-Stars will use three pitchers and catchers. Each will work three innings. The game is scheduled to start at 3 p. m. if the weather permits.

SCHOOL NEWS

The sophomores and juniors initiated the freshmen Tuesday afternoon. The older girls succeeded in putting the younger ones through a real initiation. They dressed them in very comical looking clothes, painted their faces, and changed their hair-dress. Then they made the girls parade through the streets. However, the freshmen girls all proved to be very good sports, in spite of their appearances! The freshmen boys so greatly outnumbered the sophomores and juniors that when the initiation began for them, many escaped much to the chagrin of the older boys. The freshmen really gave them quite a chase. The boys who were caught were commanded to put on boxing gloves to prove their caliber.

Refreshments of home-made cake and ice cream were served at the end of an exciting and pleasant hour of fun.

The high school girls' glee was organized Tuesday. It is under the direction of Miss Mary Walker. The girls have begun practicing the following selections: "Czechoslovakian Folk Song" and "Carmena."

Miss Priest attended a meeting at the Union League club last Friday. It was in regard to the annual Cook County speech and poster contest for Washington's birthday.

Miss Nellie G. McMahon called at the school this week, Monday.

We have a new freshman this week. His name is Arthur Frundl.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
"Matter" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, September 18.

The Golden Text was, "The grass withereth, the flower fadeeth: but the word of our God shall stand for ever" (Isaiah 40:8).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "I applied mine heart to know, and to search, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things, and to know the wickedness of folly, even of foolishness and madness. Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions" (Ecclesiastes 7:25, 29).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The physical senses can take no cognizance of God and spiritual Truth. Human belief has sought out many inventions, but not one of them can solve the problem of being without the divine Principle of divine Science. Deductions from material hypotheses are not scientific. They differ from real Science because they are not based on the divine law" (p. 273).

Certain residents along the street on which the skating rink is located on the south side of town, have sent in a complaint to the Rock Island railroad officials on whose ground the rink is located, protesting its location.

As a result of this action petitions are being circulated in the village petitioning the railroad company to make the skating rink site a permanent one. Nearly everyone in the village has signed these petitions which will be forwarded to the railroad company showing that the majority of the residents of Mokena want the skating rink and want its location to remain as it is.

The Clevenger family are moving into the former Oswald Meat Market building on Front street.

George Stermer has proved that sweet potatoes can be raised in Illinois soil as well as in sandy soil. Last spring he bought sweet potato plants in Tennessee and planted them. Now he is harvesting a bumper crop of sweet potatoes, some of the tubers being over a foot long and from two to nearly three inches in diameter. The yield from the plants it is estimated will be around five bushels.

Postmistress Margaret Maue left Monday for St. Paul, Minnesota, where she is attending the national convention of postmasters in session there this week.

The Mokena Band Parents Ass'n will hold a bake sale Saturday, Sept. 24th at 2 p. m., in the McGovney insurance office on Front street.

A. C. Hall, Morry Larson and John Ewalt returned Monday night from a fishing trip to Lake Chetek, Wisconsin. They brought back a good supply of fish.

SCHOOL NEWS

School re-opened on September 6 with a record enrollment. During these first three weeks, the new pupils have become accustomed to the routine of the school and everyone has settled down for a fine year.

The staff of the school news this year is as follows:

Robert Clark, Editor; Melvin Nordwell, Assistant Editor; Ruth Thiry, Primary Room Reporter; Betty Stark, Intermediate Room Reporter; Buddy Warning, Junior High Reporter and Hans Mueller, Sports Reporter.

The primary room is starting a study of Indians which includes stories, pictures, plays and charts about Indians. The arrival of Indians in town served to heighten the interest of the children. The first grade has enjoyed making-up stories about pets and pictures. They have also presented two plays for the rest of the room which everyone enjoyed very much.

The pupils of the Intermediate room have made some splendid posters illustrating "Safety" for the September project. The sixth grade had an interesting experiment in geography with an egg, salt and water. The children enjoy their new geography books very much.

The Junior High School room opened the school year with an enrollment of 43. We are happy to welcome three new pupils: Marlys Krapp, Catherine Reed and James Robertson to our room. The eighth grade history class made some fine maps showing the frontier lines 1763 to 1860. We have new geography textbooks this year which everyone likes very much.

The High School has an enrollment of 33, an increase of 13 over last year. There are 21 Freshmen and 12 Sophomores. The Sophomores have been bringing specimens of different kinds of leaves for the study of leaves in botany. The Freshmen have been studying the earth and the sun. As an assignment for English, the Freshmen made maps locating the points of interest in "Treasure Island."

The St. John Women Union met in the church last Thursday afternoon with the president, Mrs. Adolph Steen presiding. Committees were appointed for the annual bazaar and supper on Oct. 26. An Apron Shower for the sale was held at this meeting.

Last Tuesday evening, September 16, the Parent-Teacher Association, held a special meeting. The purpose was to determine whether or not there should be a third member on the school board. It was decided in favor of such a move so committee was chosen to select a candidate or candidates as representatives from the P. T. A. These representatives will be voted on at the next regular meeting.

Mrs. Anton Benson and Mrs. Albert Braun were judges at the Garden Show for the Will County Community League last Tuesday at their fall meeting.

Cards from Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Cooper in Wisner, Nebr., state they are having a fine time on their vacation trip.

Mrs. Frank Mall is a guest of her son Harry Mall and wife.

Postponed Opening of Raceway Will Be Held Sept. 24

Raceway track, the new outdoor sports plant, at 129th St. and Ashland Ave. Route 49 north of the junction with Route 54, will hold its postponed grand opening on Saturday night, September 24, with a midget auto racing program of nine events to be run on the new quarter mile track.

Every one of the 49 drivers who were ready to go last Saturday night when it began to rain promised Supt. Ed Rippe to be on hand for the start Saturday.

A capacity crowd was pouring into the new stadium last week and the high parking space which will accommodate 3000 autos, was rapidly filling when the rain let go in buckets, causing the postponement.

However nearly all the racers had tried the track and were unanimous in their exclamations that the oval, banked as it is, will be the fastest in America.

Leading midget race drivers of the Mid west will compete Saturday night at the new track. They will be Jimmy Snyder, Duke Nalon, Emil Andres, Myron Fohr, Harry MacQuinn, Bob Muhlke, Ted Tetterton, Tony Willman and 41 other favorites. A band will be on hand to cheer up first night patrons.

ZOOM! BOOM!

Music-Mad America 'Eats Up' New Tunes Faster Than Composers Can Write Them; The Song You Hum Today Will Be a Headache Next Week!

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

It's not so many years since you heard a good phonograph record at your neighbor's house, thereupon rushing right down to the music store to buy a copy for your own gramophone. Maybe it was one of Gene Austin's remarkably successful songs—remember?

In those days, a composer could write "Yes, We Have No Bananas" or "Margie" and settle back to watch the profits roll in from sheet music, recordings and dance orchestras. For a year or more, "Carolina Moon" swept the nation and nobody tired of it; indeed, we haven't tired of it yet.

But that was long ago—maybe 10 years—in the dim, halcyon days before home was not the same without a radio, before music became a high-speed industry instead of a leisurely profession. Nowadays you get shivers up the back one week from "A-tisket, A-tasket" and the following week you scream whenever anyone hums it. The first time you hear "Flat Foot Floogie" it has a novel catch; but after it's been smashed all over your living room by every band from Benny Goodman to the Hot Shot Six, "Flat Foot Floogie" really falls flat.

In other words, if you've any ideas about making a million by writing a popular song, get rid of them. The tide has changed so rapidly, so completely, that the modern composer starves to death unless he can grind out several new tunes a year.

Zoom Up—Boom Down.

Take "The Merry-Go-Round Broke Down"—it actually did, in three months, simply through too much radiocasting. Overnight it zoomed to nationwide popularity; almost as fast it fell with a thud and a boom that resounded up and down New York's Tin Pan Alley. Looking at incidents like this, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers ("Ascap" to the trade) is trying to promulgate fair trade practice rules to stop carrying a good tune too far.

In common practice, a publisher's representative approaches a nationally broadcast dance orchestra leader like Guy Lombardo or Rudy Vallee and begs him to give every new tune a trial. It's really quite an honor, they say, to offer a number over the air for the first time. If the public likes it, the song becomes a national favorite overnight, and is thereby ruined.

What Ascap wants is control over the number of performances a new song gets over the airwaves. And though some may cry "Monopoly!" and "Unfair!" it still isn't a bad idea.

Ascap is composed of most major song writers, who complain they must now write 10 times as many songs as in pre-radio days, and even then their sheet music and recording profits are smaller.

The best index to this up-and-down trend of public acceptance is found in the radio program which asks its listeners to vote on their favorite numbers each week. No tune has ever stayed in first place more than a few weeks; seldom do they stay in the running more than two months.

Billy Hill's Experience.

Ascap, which pools all musical copyrights of its members, collects royalties and distributes them, has won some success in its campaign. In Nebraska, where Ascap was held an unconstitutional restraint of trade, an appeal brought a temporary injunction against the decision. The organization claims it simply protects its members, which could hardly be called "racketeering." Gene Buck, Ascap president, likes to tell what happened to Billy Hill, who found himself broke while his "Home on the Range" was being hummed all over the nation.

Since the public eats up new tunes so fast, composers and orchestra leaders are getting gray hair trying to meet the demand. The result has been some ingenious devices.

One method is to take an old tune and rearrange it, change it from waltz to foxtrot time and back again. "What," asked Benny Goodman recently, "can you do with a song like 'My Gal Sal' after you've played it 4,000 times? You've got to kick it around!"

Another method, which ties up with Goodman's idea, is to go back into history. Ella Fitzgerald, Negro vocalist, completely abandoned modern tunes when she saw how fast they wear out. Instead she combed through the files and revived old numbers like "Swanee River," finally reaching the nursery rhymes. As a result, "A-tisket, A-tasket" was brought into the limelight.

Schubert to Swing.

Some months ago an opera lover was amazed at the familiarity of a tune he heard being played by a jazz orchestra. The melody kept running through his mind at its fast tempo, exasperatingly, until he slowed it down and discovered the truth: An adept arranger had simply lifted an aria from the opera, "Martha." Since then, such classical composers as Mendelssohn, Schubert, Schumann and Grieg have been turned over in their graves and changed to swing time.

This, say some, is plain "robbery," yet it's very seldom that a brand new tune comes out of Tin Pan Alley. The June-moon, love-dove, blue-you idea runs through so many modern lyrics that it sometimes becomes disgusting. What's more, many a long-dead composer has furnished the inspiration for a modern song writer. A good musician can take most popular numbers apart and show what makes them run.

Radio's growing army of entertainers helps devour the new songs, so much that the average tune lasts only a few weeks before the public tires of it. At left, Rudy Vallee of "Stein Song" fame. Below, Phil Cook, song plugger extraordinary.

Frankie Masters, well-known radio orchestra leader, leads his band in rehearsing a brand new tune—or is it just an old one revamped with a few notes and another set of lyrics?

Copyright Troubles.

"The Merry-Go-Round Broke Down" had its start in a Manhattan night club where Eddie Riley and Mike Farley pulled a verse from the Ford joke book and wrote a tune to go with it. Soon a New York radio station began broadcasting from the club and overnight the song was a national favorite. The interesting sidelight here is that the Ford joke book was not copyrighted, otherwise its publisher could have collected $250 from every radio station, cafe and restaurant that used it.

Copyrights—or lack of them—have given many a composer financial trouble. Take Shelton Brooks, now pounding piano in a New York cafe. Back in 1910, while doing the same thing in Chicago, he wrote the famous "Some of These Days." No publisher would touch it, so Mr. Brooks and a friend handled it themselves. Their net profit at 10 cents a copy was $62.50. But a few months later a vaudeville trio picked it up and started it on the road to fame. Mr. Brooks sold out to Will Rossiter for $500. That's all he got out of it though "Some of These Days" went on to make a cool million dollars.

Since good song writers are few these days, publishers have grasped at a new method of protecting themselves and keeping the public happy. They're keeping in mind the fact that copyrights on the tunes that thrilled grandfather are now running out, and that it's often possible to buy renewal rights from the composers or their heirs. With new tunes so few, orchestra leaders often find it convenient—and pleasing—to insert a medley of oldtimers in their programs.

Reviving the Nineties.

One of the leaders in this old tune business is Jerry Vogel, a New York publisher who got a break several years ago when George A. Cohen turned over his entire portfolio without charge. Thus, Vogel found himself sitting with full rights on such one-time hit tunes as "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," "George Washington Jr." and "Over There."

Sometime later a woman from near Boston dropped in and offered to sell renewal rights on the number her uncle had written, Henry J. Sayers' "Ta Ra Ra Boom De Ee." Vogel snatched it up and showed it to Fred Waring, then playing on the Ford hour. Waring tried it out and Mr. Ford—a lover of old tunes—liked it so well he had the orchestra write special lyrics. They used the tune more than a year, which was a nice piece of business for Mr. Vogel on a tune which a few months before had been dead and forgotten.

But at best the revival business is only a stop-gap proposition, a matter of securing tunes that will fill in until Tin Pan Alley can turn out more "new" songs. Publishers often get pretty disgusted about the whole thing. Although they receive vast amounts of script from amateurs, the bulk of it is sent back unopened because there's seldom anything of value. An exception was the song, "Springtime in the Rockies," which a San Francisco publisher bought from an amateur several years ago. It was a terrific smash.

Again, publishers are often the victims of their own disgust or smugness, call it what you will. Hoagy Carmichael wrote "Star Dust" quite a few years ago but it gathered dust in the drawer until someone tried it out, having nothing else to do on a rainy afternoon. You know what happened. Similarly, another publisher tossed "If I Could Be With You One Hour Tonight" on the shelf until it was forgotten. Finally somebody wrote a new arrangement of it and a highly successful recording was made.

President not distressed by election of Republican "Liberals" . . . New "purge" now under way plans to sidetrack Garner . . . Maritime commission distressed over defeat of Senator McAdoo . . . Every "Yes, but" Democrat wins.

WASHINGTON.—President Roosevelt's declaration that election of Republican "liberals" will not distress him was the first public statement to this effect, but for nearly a week before that there had been grave concern down at the department of agriculture, and among Kansas Democrats, over a much more pointed statement of the same generality.

Several important New Deal officials were talking with the President about the Kansas situation. Mr. Roosevelt was told that the belief of his callers was that the Democrats would elect a governor, but that they were very much afraid

SENATOR MCGILL

Clyde M. Reed, former governor and editor, would defeat Sen. George McGill.

"That will be all right with me," said the President, cheerfully.

"But, Mr. President, this man Reed has criticized almost every farm policy this administration has attempted," protested one of the visitors, "whereas Senator McGill has voted for every agricultural measure the administration has supported."

"Nevertheless," the President replied, "Clyde Reed is an aggressive progressive."

Not anxious to provoke trouble, but hoping to get the President "in line" one way or another, the callers left. Talking together afterwards they canvassed the McGill situation. What had he done to offend the President?

President's Attitude on Senator McGill Puzzles

None of them could figure, then or since. So the word drifted around, confidentially of course, until if there is anybody in the department of agriculture or in high Democratic circles in Washington who has not heard it, he or she is pretty nearly gossip-proof.

For the amazing fact is that George McGill is as nearly a 100 per cent administration supporter as sits in the upper house. Much more than Robert F. Wagner of New York, for example. Wagner voted against the reorganization bill, one of President Roosevelt's pets. He voted against ratification of the St. Lawrence seaway, which Roosevelt is seeking to revive.

Much more than William Gibbs McAdoo, so cordially endorsed by Roosevelt in his disastrous primary. McAdoo opposed the President on the World court issue. In fact McGill is one of the very few Democratic senators with not a single black mark against his record so far as blind obedience to White House wishes is concerned. He is a "yes man" plus.

Whereas Clyde Reed, as every important bureau chief in the department of agriculture knows, has been a thorn in Secretary Henry A. Wallace's side. He is very critical of both past and present performances of the Roosevelt-Wallace farm relief program. Presumably he would vote with the critics of Wallace if he comes to the senate.

The only answer anyone has been able to figure as to the President's logic is that Clyde Reed, although a Republican and a former governor, was almost openly for Roosevelt in 1936.

A New "Purge" Is Started To Sidetrack Garner

A new "purge" is now under way. Undismayed by crushing defeats in South Carolina and Idaho, and defeats to come indicated by polls and information in Maryland and Georgia, the New Deal is planning to strip all recalcitrants of their patronage, and build up new machines in Maryland, Georgia, South Carolina and other states where the organizations at present are controlled by men who might not see eye to eye with President Roosevelt when the next Democratic national convention is called to order.

The whole object is to make sure that the convention does not nominate a man of the type of Vice President John Nance Garner, or Jesse H. Jones, or Harry Flood Byrd. What is wanted of course is a convention which will nominate some 100 per cent New Dealer.

Leaving out California, where neither of the leading Democratic candidates for senator was anti-New Deal, and the paramount issue was the $30-a-week pension scheme opposed by Sen. William Gibbs McAdoo and the President, the box score to date is not very comforting to the New Dealer.

The "lame ducks" so far are William Dieterich of Illinois, George L. Berry of Tennessee, James Pope of Idaho, and McAdoo, all 100 per centers. Senators of the "yes, but" variety who have been renominated are Alva B. Adams of Colorado (not actually nominated but with no opposition candidate whose name can be printed on the ballots), Bennett C. Clark of Missouri, Guy M. Gillette of Iowa, Ellison D. Smith of South Carolina, and Frederick Van Nuys of Indiana.

"Yes, But" Democrats Are Successful in Every Case

Curiously enough, many commentators spoke of the South Carolina result as the first test of the purge. It is true that President Roosevelt himself never asked for Senator Gillette's defeat in Iowa, but the fact that James Roosevelt did, plus the fact that not only Harry L. Hopkins injected himself, but that the President approved Hopkins' action, led to the Iowa result being classified as a "purge that failed."

Sitting senators who are 100 per cent New Dealers and who have been renominated include Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky, Claude Pepper of Florida, Lister Hill of Alabama, George McGill of Kansas, and Robert R. Reynolds of North Carolina. Of these McGill is generally conceded to be the only one who faces any danger.

Meanwhile two Republican sitting senators, James J. Davis of Pennsylvania, and Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota, were renominated over opposition in primaries although they had opposed certain New Deal measures.

So far every "Yes, but" Democrat facing a renomination fight has won, while the score of the 100 per centers is no better than 50 per cent.

Maritime Commission Is Worried Over McAdoo

At the maritime commission there is more than a little distress over the defeat of Sen. William Gibbs McAdoo in California for renomination. The fear is not based, to any noticeable degree, on affection for the senator. Quite the contrary. It is based on the possibility, as the maritime commission crowd views the situation, that President Roosevelt may appoint Mr. McAdoo to the existing vacancy on the maritime commission.

All of which is perplexing to those who have the pleasure of knowing Mr. McAdoo personally, for few men in public life in the last 30 years have had more charm, or were easier to get along with. Mr. McAdoo was on good terms, when he was secretary of the treasury during the entire first Wilson administration and all through the war days, with almost everyone who had to do with his department, or with any of the many additional activities, including the railroads, which were entrusted to him by Wilson.

The only real row he ever had with a newspaper man was over a story intimating that there was a big profit for Mr. McAdoo personally if the ship purchase bill, then being filibustered to death, should pass.

A short time later the same newspaper—the old New York Herald—printed a story that Wilson and Col. Edward M. House had broken. He was premature, by a couple of years, and Wilson was enraged. He wrote the editor that he understood the story had been written "by the same reporter who recently so inexcusably libeled Secretary McAdoo."

Never Harbored Malice Against His Defamers

But not only did McAdoo get along beautifully with all the other newspaper men, but remembers them to this day, calling by their first names and with every indication of affection men who went out of their way to attack everything he did, and to thwart his every objective. This also goes for everything connected with his unsuccessful fight for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1924. Actually "Smear McAdoo" stories caused the ill Wilson to turn against him, before the end, but McAdoo harbored no malice against his newspaper defamers.

Also very unlike some well-known present day government officials, McAdoo never used the power of his office to punish personal or political enemies.

Lawyers for a very prominent and immensely wealthy Republican family, which owned a leading G. O. P. "organ," were dismayed after the Harding administration came into office to find that the treasury was not as benign to them as in the McAdoo days!

The Third Big Thing

By SUSAN FELDMAN

UNTIL now only two exciting things had come into Anna Kearn's twenty-two years of life. Both occurred when she was only seventeen, a senior at high school.

Anna had been the plainest and quietest girl in her class. She wasn't even "least popular." She just wasn't noticed. Her hair hung down her back in a heavy braid. Her clothes were severely cut. She spoke to no one first, and when others tried to make friends with her, her painfully forced manner led them to believe that she did not desire their friendship.

Nevertheless, Anna delighted in looking at her pretty classmates, and she was afflicted with an almost fanatical worship of Don Roberts, the football hero and the most popular boy in school.

One day Anna became ill. It was not a serious illness but kept her in bed for a week. In her room at home Anna was a changed person. Here she was a princess cast into a dungeon because she would not marry a powerful, cruel king but remained true to her poor knight. Here she was all in all. In her room she let her hair fall loosely to her shoulders. It softened her face and lent a lovely glow to her cheeks and eyes.

One afternoon, as she lay in bed gazing through the open window at the blue skies, she heard voices in the yard below.

Anna sat up and looked eagerly at the door. Slowly it opened and a cheerful voice said: "Your mother told me to come right up. I've come to visit you and bring you something."

Don Roberts, the high school hero! He had come to visit her! In that moment her hero worship turned into something deeper and finer, and she welcomed him with pleasure and surprise. Don was quite as startled as she, but only because she looked so pretty.

"Gosh, Anna," he said, "you look awfully pretty with your hair down like that, and everything."

Then, suddenly, he remembered something. With a half-smile and half-puzzled look on his face, he drew a small candy box out of his pocket. Then he grinned and said: "Here, Anna, is something some of the fellows elected me to bring to you. I hope you'll like it."

Anna thrilled with the laughter in his eyes. No one had ever before been so kind to her. Her eyes flashed with delight and her fall was complete.

"For me?" she asked. So she took the box, opened it quickly, and gazed petrified at its contents: a big lemon!

Then Don laughed and laughed. For one agonizing moment Anna thought she would cry. Then: "Thank you, Don, and thank the others. It's nice to be remembered."

When Don left her he was immediately joined by a half dozen youths. "What happened?" they asked. "What'd she say?"

"Say?" he was full of admiration for Anna. "She's a sport! She said, 'Thank you, Don, and thank the others. It's nice to be remembered.' Gee, she's awfully pretty."

From that day Don began to pay attention to Anna. He walked near her, talked at her, invited her to every conceivable event, but was coldly snubbed in every case. Incidentally, Anna was wearing her hair curled softly about her face. Don persisted in his attentions even after he had graduated from college. Though she had forgiven the lemon episode, she seldom encouraged him. Finally he left for a position in New York. That was more than a year ago. Meanwhile Anna lived the life of the average American girl.

Now as she sat in the same little room staring happily at a letter and picture in her hand she thought back over the past few years. The third big thing was coming into her life! Don was in a position to get married and wanted her for his wife.

Marriage Problem in Africa

Christian denominations have sprung up so rapidly among the natives of South Africa that the government has had to step in and separate those qualified to have marriage ceremonies performed. There are more than 500 "all-Bantu" Christian denominations in the country, giving South Africa the largest number of religions in the world. The government has announced in Pretoria that it will issue an "approved list" of churches having clergymen able to keep a marriage register and therefore entitled to unite couples.

Pioneer American women, although not highly educated believed their daughters needed as much "book learning" as their brothers to be able to take their place in the "new world."

BILLIONS of TOOTHPICKS

A Yankee Brought the Idea from South America; Now These Tiny Splinters Provide a Big Industry in the Busy State of Maine.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

BY WHATEVER avenue he enters the state of Maine, the newcomer promptly realizes that it can best be described as a land of trees. Forests cover more than three-fourths of the area. The present 15 million acres of woodland represent a shrinkage of less than 20 per cent from the primeval condition. In recent years the few salients slowly won along the forest border by newly cleared farms are much more than offset by the steady push of pine, spruce, fir, and hemlock seedlings, everywhere winning back abandoned fields.

At the first session of its legislature, Maine adopted a seal with the north star as the crest, below which the shield carries the white pine and moose, the two monarchs of the Maine woods. The description of the seal, in the 1820 laws of Maine, says of the pine: "It is as well the staple of the commerce of Maine, as the pride of her forests." Seventy-five years later, the pine cone and tassel was declared by legislative resolve to be the floral emblem of Maine, having been selected by an informal popular referendum.

As early as 1656, the town authorities of South Berwick passed an order against waste of timber. In more recent times forest conservation was accepted as a business policy, and protective measures against fire were early adopted and generously supported by timberland owners, even before state laws were passed. Maine was the first state to erect lookout towers and also the first to build them of steel. The first lookout station was erected by private landowners on Squaw mountain in 1906. At present the state maintains 86 fire stations.

The first sawmill in America was built near York in 1623, and another at South Berwick in 1631; and 50 years later there were 24 mills in the province of Maine, including the first gang sawmill on the continent at a site aptly named Great Works.

Opportunity for the infant colonies came from the depletion of England's forests. During the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries, naval reserves meant oak, not oil, but Queen Elizabeth and her Stuart successors squandered the royal forests to provide increased revenues independent of parliament, while admirals protested. There was a scarcity of oak timbers, and the white pine of New England gradually became England's chief source of the masts sorely needed by its navy.

In a way the royal navy's timber policy contributed to the Revolution. The "broad arrow," which in English forests was the sign of naval authority over chosen trees, did not hit the mark when introduced into New England. The commandeering of mast pines was regarded by the colonists as an invasion of property rights. An official complaint is on record that only 1 tree in 500 suitable for masts was sent to England.

A diameter of two feet being the lower limit for "broad arrow" trees, the Maine sawmills turned out boards just within the limit, so that roofs of old houses of that period show splendid pine boards 22 or 23 inches wide, but almost never one of 24 inches.

Scores of "broad arrow" lawsuits were tried, but impartial juries were impossible to find for mast cases. The prejudice against masts reached a climax at the outbreak of the Revolution, when the export of masts was violently stopped, the opposition at Falmouth leading later to the bombardment and burning of that town. Shutting off the supply of American masts for seven years so weakened British fleets in their rigging that they suffered unduly from storms during the Revolution.

One "broad arrow" inspector in his report mentioned one pine of over 17 feet in circumference.

In time Bangor became the world's largest lumber - shipping port, and in 1830 Maine led all states in output of lumber. Throughout the timber states of the West many of the most skilled lumbermen hail from the Pine Tree state.

Cut Fast, Grows Fast

The three decades of the Twentieth century have witnessed the heaviest cuts of the whole 300 years of lumbering in Maine. But there is good reason to believe that at present Maine spruce and fir are growing faster than they are being cut.

More spectacular than the 300-year life of the lumber industry has been the development of pulp- and paper-making. This has become the state's largest industry, with Maine leading all other states in pulp production from 1914 to 1930. The spruce, poplar, fir, and hemlock from the forests of Maine are converted into newsprint, and also into high-grade paper for books and for the popular magazines, and into writing paper and wrapping paper of all grades, including the finest tissue. Paper bags, cartons, even pie and luncheon plates, demonstrate the variety of wood-pulp uses.

The white birch, which adds so much beauty to the scenery of river bank and lake shore, is converted into spools, shoe-pegs, clothespins, and toothpicks. In the form of toothpicks, the annual output of which reaches scores of billions, Maine birch is exported largely to the Latin countries on both sides of the Atlantic.

Clipper Days

For more than two and a half centuries shipbuilding flourished and became the chief industry in 50 coast and river towns. The clipper-ship era was when Maine came into her own with these beautiful ships built of Maine timber by Maine builders, and largely officered and manned by natives of Maine whose birthright was a knowledge of the ways of the sea.

Bath not only won fame for its wooden ships, but when iron and steel replaced oak and pine, Bath met the new demand by building the first steel sailing vessel, a four-master. This vessel and the last wooden four-master built in Bath were both sunk by the Germans, the wooden William P. Frye being the first American ship thus sacrificed. Battleships, cruisers, gunboats, and destroyers, as well as the ram Katahdin, are included in the total output of more than a million and a quarter tons of shipping launched at Bath alone.

Fruits Always Are Hard to Resist

Nothing Makes Lovelier Centerpiece Than Grapes

By EDITH M. BARBER

IF YOU are anything like me, you find it hard to resist the purchase of a variety of fruits at this time of year when you go to market. I just must have my fruit bowl filled with blushing green pears, red, yellow and blue plums and golden peaches, with a red apple or two. Then there are red and white grapes for a final garnish. Nothing makes a lovelier centerpiece for the dinner table. At the same time the decorations may furnish the dessert.

The pears, which may be too hard to eat when purchased, can go on ripening in the fruit bowl. Just be sure not to let them overripen. These hard pears are, of course, well adapted for cooking. They may be baked or "poached" in a syrup which may be given color and flavor by means of a dash of grenadine. I also like to cook a few slices of lemons in the syrup, both on account of the flavor which the tartness provides and because of the garnish which they give. You may like to stud the pears with cloves before cooking and to add a piece of stick cinnamon to the syrup.

When pears are low in price, you will begin to think about canning them in syrup and spicing them for use during winter. Occasionally this fruit is used for marmalade, but always in combination with other fruits of more distinctive flavor. The same is true when the sliced or diced fruit is used as a cup for a first course.

On the other hand, plums seem to have been designed especially for marmalade, particularly those which are acid in flavor. They may, of course, be canned and spiced and nothing is better for cobbler. At least that is my opinion. By the way, have you ever used plums to flavor ice cream? Down in Virginia recently I tasted for the first time green gage ice cream, which is a local specialty.

Dumplings With Stewed Fruit.

1 cup mashed potatoes
1 cup flour
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup shortening
1 egg
Stewed fruit

Mix mashed potatoes, flour, salt and melted shortening together. Add egg, mix thoroughly. Drop from a teaspoon on top of any stewed fruit mixture when it has partially cooked. Cook uncovered over a low fire about 15 minutes.

Medley Conserve.

14 yellow peaches, pared
8 red plums, pared
1 pound white grapes, stemmed
1 small can diced pineapple
1 large orange
Sugar
2 cups chopped Brazil nuts or almonds

Cut peaches and plums into small pieces, halve grapes, drain juice from canned pineapple and slice orange. Mix the fruit and measure. Allow three-quarters of a cup of sugar to each cup of fruit. Mix sugar and fruit in a large kettle and cook over a low fire, stirring constantly until the sugar is dissolved. Cook 30 to 40 minutes, until syrup is thick. Stir in nuts and boil one minute. Pour into clean, hot jars and seal immediately. Makes 11 to 12 six-ounce glasses.

Plum Jam.

2½ pounds sour ripe plums
7½ cups sugar
½ bottle fruit pectin
Pit plums and cut into small pieces. Crush well and add one-fourth cup of water, cover and cook over a low fire five minutes. Stir in sugar and stir until dissolved over a low fire. Bring to a boil over a hot fire and stir constantly while mixture boils one minute. Boil one minute, remove from fire and stir in fruit pectin. Skim and pour quickly into clean, hot glasses and seal with paraffin. Makes 12 to 13 six-ounce glasses.

Ginger Pears.

4 pounds sliced green pears
2 ounces of green ginger root
2 lemons
3 pounds sugar
Select hard green pears and slice very thin. Scrape and cut the ginger root in tiny pieces and squeeze a little lemon juice over it. Cover the pears with the sugar and let them stand several hours. Place over a slow fire and let them simmer; add the ginger root and the juice and grated rind of the lemons. When clear and very thick, remove from fire and put in hot clean jars. Seal.

Pear Amber.

5 firm pears
2 cups sugar
2 cups water
1 stick cinnamon
2 slices lemon
Salt
1 tablespoon gelatin
Pare, halve and core the pears. Make a syrup with the sugar and water. Add the pears, cinnamon, lemon and salt and cook slowly until the pears are tender. Arrange pears in serving dish. To the hot syrup add the gelatin, which has been soaking in a little cold water five minutes. Stir until dissolved and strain the mixture over the pears. Cool and then chill in refrigerator until firm. Serve with boiled custard.

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Describes Diet After Middle Age; Shows How Right Food Can Prolong the Vigorous Years

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

ONE of the best prescriptions ever offered for longevity was advanced by the wise man who said: In the twenties, prepare for the thirties; in the thirties, prepare for the forties; and after that—prepare for a long and vigorous old age!

That advice is well worth following, for it has been estimated that by taking into account all the newer knowledge of nutrition, it is possible not only to improve health, but to add a number of years to the normal life span.

A Man Is as Young as He Feels

It has been well said that "the age of man has small relation to his years," for it has been demonstrated, both clinically and in the scientist's laboratory, that old age is a physiological condition rather than an accumulation of years.

In grandmother's day, a woman of 50 was considered old. Today that age is regarded as young, and much of the important work of the world is being done by men and women who can see 50 only by looking over their shoulder.

Importance of Correct Diet

On the other hand, thousands of Americans are unknowingly impairing their efficiency and shortening their lives through the misuse of food. They are eating the wrong kind of food—and what is equally disastrous—they are overeating! They do not seem to realize that eating too much does not strengthen the body, but exhausts it with the labors of digestion. The surplus nourishment clogs the system and may be indirectly responsible for headache, dyspepsia, biliousness and mental dullness.

Unless they change their habits of eating, they will inevitably become victims of their own indiscretions. For while it is folly to neglect the health at any age, to do so in middle life is to open the way to an early death or to an old age marred by sickness.

Keep Down the Weight

The first 25 years of man's life are devoted to growth. During this period of youth, the body usually has a large fund of reserve energy which can be called upon in times of stress. During the next 25 or 30 years, the weight should remain constant. If the diet is properly regulated, and sound habits of hygiene are followed, a man or woman will come into middle age full of vigor and with mental and physical capacities undiminished.

Unfortunately, however, the laws of hygiene and nutrition are often broken during the active middle years. As a result, bodily reserves are depleted and middle age finds many men and women near the danger line, no longer able to resist infections and the degenerative diseases.

That is why it is so desirable—if you hope to be vigorous at 50 and after—that you begin to plan for it many years earlier.

Live sensibly. Avoid overwork. Regularly take a moderate amount of exercise. Get enough sleep so that you avoid that chronic "tired feeling." Above all, eat enough, but not too much, of the foods that build and maintain health: milk; eggs; fruits and vegetables; protein foods in amounts just sufficient to meet your requirements, so that there is no excess to be eliminated; enough fuel foods to give you plenty of pep and power, but not in amounts that will cause the weight increase which many people erroneously believe inevitable during the middle years.

Curb the Appetite for Rich Foods

It is most important to avoid overeating. For muscular activity decreases with the passing years. The middle aged individual often rides where a younger person might walk or observes active sports from the sidelines where he formerly played them with zeal. Unfortunately, however, the appetite seldom diminishes in proportion to the lessened fuel needs. That is why every individual who has entered upon the middle years should check his or her weight frequently, and promptly reduce the fuel foods if a significant gain is noted.

The protein requirement diminishes somewhat after the age of 60 for no new tissue is being built. It is, furthermore, advisable to take a large share of the protein in the form of milk and eggs.

Vegetables should be used freely and if there is difficulty in mastication, they may be finely chopped. Fresh fruits may be eaten as long as they do not cause fermentation; otherwise cooked fruits should be used instead. Contrary to popular opinion, sweets can frequently be eaten in considerable amounts without causing indigestion. Fats, however, should be used sparingly.

Hot Foods Beneficial

Hot foods are often more easily digested than cold, and it is helpful to begin a meal with hot broth, in order to stimulate the secretion of digestive fluids. A hot beverage may also be beneficial at bedtime.

It is sometimes observed that five or six small meals are more easily digested than three large ones. Each person should discover what meal schedule best suits individual requirements and then abide by it. For it is indeed true that middle age—and the years beyond—are largely what you make them!

HOW to SEW

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

THIS mat is made of white cotton cable cord such as you buy at the notion counter for corded seams and trimmings. The original mat from which this design was taken was made of—no one of this generation would ever guess what! Corset strings.

The design shown here is compact and, copied in rather heavy cord, makes an ideal hot dish mat. Follow the sketches for directions. Make the circles in pairs, as shown, using No. 40 cotton thread to sew them. Braid three cords together and then sew the braided strip around and around to make the center of the mat. Sew a row of the circles to the edge of this center part, then add another braided row, being careful to "ease in" the inside edge just enough to keep the mat flat. Continue adding alternate rows of circles and braiding until the mat is the size desired.

To join the ends of the braided rows, pull one end through the braiding to the wrong side of the mat; then trim the ends and sew them flat. AROUND the HOUSE

Items of Interest to the Housewife

For Stiff Leather Straps.—Leather luggage straps that have become hard may be softened by soaking for several hours in hot, soapy water. Allow to dry in a cool place while still soapy, and finally rub with a cloth dipped in linseed oil.

When Cleaning Windows.—Tissue paper makes an excellent polish for window glass and mirrors. Wash, dry and then polish with the paper.

A Twine Holder.—A funnel makes an excellent holder for a ball of twine. Choose one large enough to hold a good-sized ball. Put the end of the string through the neck of the funnel.

Cultivate Soft Voice.—A harsh rasping voice, coming from a pretty, well-groomed girl, is sure to jolt the nerves of listeners. All sensitive ears rebel against a flat, dull voice or one that screeches and shouts, and even more against hardly audible, mumbling conversation. Try to speak clearly and distinctly, being particular about the enunciation of each syllable and word.

For Damp Closets.—A saucerful of quicklime placed in a damp closet or cupboard will not only absorb all dampness but will sweeten and disinfect the closet.

For Scuffed Furniture.—If you will take a soft flannel cloth, dip it in iodine, then rub gently over scuffed mahogany furniture, when it dries the scratches will be almost unnoticeable. Then when iodine is dry, apply a liberal coating of a good furniture oil.

Preserving Scrub Brushes.—Never put scrubbing brushes away until they have been thoroughly washed, rinsed and shaken, so that most of the moisture has been removed.

Clogged Sinks.—A mixture of washing soda and vinegar poured down a choked-up sink or basin will dissolve any soap or grease which is causing it to clog.

To Destroy Smoke Odor.—Put a basin of water in each room and leave windows open an inch at top and bottom until the odor disappears.

Still Der Kaiser

Although ex-Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany has been an exile and outcast for almost 20 years, he has abandoned none of his royal prerogatives. The gentleman still refuses to see visitors until they have been informed how to act in his presence, a set of rules that even includes "the proper way to walk" into his audience chamber. —Collier's Weekly.

Rock Island Installs New Crossing Signs

Last Friday the Rock Island railroad had new signs erected at crossings in Mokena and New Lenox. These signs have a two fold purpose. By day the sign has a black back ground with the Rock Island emblem painted in red on it. At night this sign is detached and another one appears, this one having a white back ground with large black letters bearing the words "Watchman Off Duty". The new signs are bolted to a piece of rail which is set in concrete three feet in the ground. The new signs are used as an added safety measure at crossings which are protected by flagmen only during the day time. The flagmen stationed at the crossings where the new signs are located change the dual signs when they go on and off duty each day.
